THE PAYMENT OF A NOTE

GROUNDS UPON WHICH ELEANOR M. CHAMBERS RESISTS IT.

She Alleges that Joseph J. Carey Forced Her by Threats to Sign a Note for $5,000.

Attorney Merrill Moores yesterday filed a reply denying the allegations set out in the answer and cross-complaint of Eleanor M. Chambers to the suit of Joseph J. Carey for the collection of a note for $5,000. Carey recently brought suit in the Superior Court on the note, which was given last September and made payable on demand. By way of an answer and cross-complaint Eleanor M. Chambers avers that the note is invalid because there was no legal consideration for the execution of the note and that she signed it under a threat made by Carey.

In the third paragraph of the cross-complaint Mrs. Chambers admits that she signed the note, but says she was compelled to sign it against her will and over her protest. Carey threatened that unless she signed the note for $5,000 and paid him $500 in cash he would go to her father, members of her family and acquaintances and falsely charge her with maintaining relations with an Harry Gray while in Toronto, Can. Carey brings the charge that Eleanor M. Chambers is a prostitute and threatened to go to her father, family and friends and charge her with having lived with him as his wife for a period of several years. Mrs. Chambers says in her cross-complaint that her father was, at that time, in very feeble health and she feared that if such charges were made against her it would cause his death. She avers that Carey was a very violent man and for several days, and being at the time alone in her house with no one to protect her from him or to prevent his going to the sick bed of her father, and believing that he would make the charges if his demands were not met, she signed the note and paid him the $500. She said she did this to prevent him from carrying out his threats and believed that after he recovered from the effects of his intoxication he would restore the note. She says the note and money were forced from her by reason of the threats made by Carey and for no other reason.

ENLISTED MAN IN TROUBLE.

It May Bring Him a Dishonorable Discharge—List of Recruits.

The officers of the United States naval recruiting station experienced a little trouble yesterday, as it was reported to them that John H. Kinley, who enlisted on Monday, had been found guilty in Police Court of stealing a suit of clothes and fined $10 and sentenced to 100 days in the workhouse. Lieutenant Blamer will try to have the prisoner released so that he can be sent on to New York, but if the local authorities will not let the man go the Navy Department will probably give Kinley a dishonorable discharge.

MAJ. THORPE IN TOWN

SENT HERE BY GEN. OTIS TO INSPECT ARSENAL GROUNDS.

While Conservative in Statement, He Thinks the Government May Retain the Site.

CHANCES FOR BATTERY POST

MAJ. THORPE IMPRESSED WITH UTILITY OF THE LOCATION.

Either an Artillery or Infantry Post Would Be a Good Thing for the City—An Inventory.

"I really do not believe the War Department will decide to completely abolish the United States arsenal grounds in Indianapolis," said Major Frank Thorpe, of the United States army, at the Bates House last night while conversing with a Journal representative on the probable disposition the government will make of the arsenal site in this city.

Major Thorpe arrived in the city yesterday from Fort Sheridan as a result of a tour of inspection of the arsenal grounds. He is here to inspect the grounds and buildings to ascertain if it would be advisable for the War Department to utilize the grounds and buildings for an army post for infantry or for a battery of field artillery. The orders also gave Major Thorpe instructions to take a complete inventory of everything connected with the arsenal and to make a report to General Otis, who in turn will report to the War Department.

Major Thorpe spent the afternoon at the arsenal and made a preliminary inspection of the grounds and buildings. He will visit the arsenal again to-day and make a thorough inspection and inventory to incorporate in his report to General Otis. Major Shaler, commandant at the arsenal, was out of the city yesterday and it will be necessary for Major Thorpe to see him before he can complete his report.

Speaking of his recommendations last night, Major Thorpe said: "While I might make recommendations in my report for the arsenal grounds to be utilized by the government as an army post for from one to four companies, the latter being a battalion of infantry, or for a battery of field artillery, and General Otis might also make similar recommendations, based upon my report, the War Department may have differing views on the matter and decide to abolish the site as a government post altogether. You can see that what I might say to the government would have no final bearing as to the disposition to be made of the grounds, but I might tell you that in my opinion I do not believe the War Department will completely abolish the grounds."

"I was greatly impressed with the grounds and buildings when I visited them this afternoon. I did not expect to find such a beautiful place when I was ordered to proceed to Indianapolis. The site is a beautiful one and one that might be utilized by the government to good advantage. The grounds are delightfully located and the buildings are all in good repair. The place is much larger than I expected to find, but not quite as large as the department requires for an army post."

"For an ideal site for an army post of either infantry or artillery it requires plenty of room—a larger area, in fact, than the arsenal grounds. For an army post of infantry there must be a place for rifle practice and this requires a range of 1,000 yards and something to stop the bullets from rifles, as the modern rifles will send a bullet nearly half way across the continent if there is nothing to stop its progress. It is necessary to have a place where such a rifle range can be established, for the soldiers must have practice in the use of their rifles. Of course, it would be possible to locate the rifle practice grounds at some other place, but it must be near to the post and easily accessible."

"The arsenal grounds could also be utilized as a post for a battery of field artillery, but the grounds are not large enough for drilling purposes and it would be necessary to secure a site not far distant from the grounds where the practice drills could be held."

"Should the government establish an infantry post of four companies here it would mean that barracks would have to be built for about 400 men besides the officers. Some of the old buildings at the arsenal could easily be remodeled to meet the requirements for an infantry post, but it would be a great expense to the government. Of course if fewer companies should be sent here, if a post were to be established there would not be so much improving required."

"In case a battery of field artillery is established here it would mean a great thing for Indianapolis. A battery consists of 100 men besides the officers, and 12 horses are needed. One of the buildings at the arsenal grounds, I noticed last night, is a little too near the building that would have to be utilized for the horse stable, and this is one of the greatest objections to the present location of the buildings. A barracks would also have to be established for the men of the battery."

"In making an inspection of the buildings it is necessary to take into consideration the amount of improving that would be required to make a suitable barracks for either infantry or artillery. It would be necessary to practically remodel some of the buildings if the grounds are used for an army post."

"So you believe then, Major Thorpe, that the recent order to abolish the Indianapolis arsenal grounds may be rescinded?" asked the reporter.

"I do not believe that the War Department will rescind the order," replied Major Thorpe, "but of course I am not in a position to say what disposition will be made of the grounds in case the department does not establish an infantry post here or a battery of artillery it may use the site for a general recruiting station."

Major Thorpe is well pleased with Indianapolis. He well is much impressed with the city and whether good horses were brought to this city or not. He was also very anxious to know the condition of the surrounding country contiguous to Indianapolis, the water supply, kind of heat used in the city and every sort of information that would be necessary for him to have in making a detailed report to General Otis. He will confer with the Indiana adjutant general regarding the use of the target practice in Indianapolis and also with the army recruiting station in this city.
